Edha and the other ten members of the "Alpha Secret Society" had also jumped to a similar conclusion, and they were an anxious lot of young ladies as they waited for Dolly's return from that "star chamber," the Misses Primrose study.

They had not long to wait. Dolly reappeared in ten minutes, a bright real spot in either check and a haughty poise to her head which told of right-roots in dignation. The dinner, bell rang just at that moment, and as the roots in dignation. The dinner, bell rang just at that moment, and as the wisses Firmose were veritable marginest in the matter of punctuality the Alphas had to curb their burning curiosity till the evening meal was over.

As the saucers of canned cherries.

As the saucers of canned cherries (cach supplemented with a thin slab off sawdusty sponge cake) were passed around there was a quick exchange for glances among the plotters, which, luckily, no one noticed. The meal over, the ten Alphas, as if by concerted signal, made straight for Dolly's room. Then the door was locked, the keyhole stuffed, while all conversation was carried on in a whisper. "Well," said Edna, as they all huddled together, "well, tell us all about it. I suppose that red-headed thing, Nina, has been telling tales as usual."

And very likely such would have been the case but for that prying Nina, who felt that something was going on and made it her business to find out all about it.

Nina Jansen was the daughter of a poor country elergyman, and as such the Misses Primrose took her at a reduced rate. And these excellent hadies did not let Nina forget the fact. Nina was a toady by mature, and in her efforts to curry favor with the teachers had made herself very unpopular with the other girls. Nor was she by any means a favorite with the Misses Primrose. For though they often found her useful, they did not make a thorough search of every com, Miss Tabitha." Dolly went on.

"Very well, Dolly, I will do as you suggest," said Miss Tabitha at last, and, leaving her sister in charge of the girls, she called to Nina to accompany her and Dolly back to the school at once.

In the meantime Nina's box arrived. Edna, who had only been shamming sickness, had been on the watch for it, and she opened the front door before the bell was rung, and so not even the servant knew of its arrival. It was a heavy box, but Edna managed to carry it up stairs. If anybody had been near they would have heard considerable ripping and hammering during the next ten minutes. Then with a very red face and dancing eyes Edna carried the box into Nina's room and left it in a conspicuous oom and left it in a conspicuous

Though neither Edna nor Dolly would go into particulars, the Alphas knew that the crisis was to come on Friday afternoon or evening, and, needless to say, they were all in a state of suppressed excitement. Ever since the confiscation of the cherries the girls had been busy getting rid of them, a few at a time, until now, Thursday evening, nothing remained but the empty cans, snugly hid away behind Dolly's rows of books.
That same afternoon an anonymous note was placed on the study table. It read: "All the canned cherries have been taken from the storeroom. Ask Of course Nina had nothing to do at obey. #### THEORIES OF DREAMS.

Peculiarities Noted But Not Yet Scientifically Explained.
"There is no modern theory about dreams," said a New Orleans physician, "or, rather, there are five or six, and they differ so radically hoth in premises and conclusions as to leave the subject more of a nextery than premises and conclusions as to leave the subject more of a mystery than ever. It is undeniable, however, that the psychologists have collected an immense amount of valuable data, which, of course, is the first step to-ward arriving at a solution. Many of the things they have noted are re-markable, and I find several enumer-ated in the last issue of a French med-ical monthly. It is said, for instance, that one can dream of any given obical monthly. It is said, for instance, that one can dream of any given object by thinking about it intently for four of five hours before retiring, and then dismissing it from the mind. It should be something unusual or fantastic. Things dwelt upon just before going to sleep are rarely dreamed about. Another curious statement was that the familiar dream of falling can generally, be induced by tying a handkerchilef tightly around the force arm and leaving it on when one goes to bed. It was also noted that bright colors are rarely seen in dreams. They

Why He Needed a Rest.

Toward the close of a long sitting in an English court, when another case was called, the leading counsel rose and huskily requested that it might be post poned until next morning. "On what ground?" snapped the judge. "I have been arguing a case all day in court it, and am completely exhausted," explained the lawyer. "Very well," said the judge, "we'll take the next." Another lawyer rose and also pleaded for adjournment.

"What have you been doing?" "My jord," said the lawyer, in a wearied voice, "I have been in court it, listening to my learned brother."

Potats of Advantage We Have Over Foreigners.

Le Julian Ralph, who is able to see things with an Englishman's eye, aftered leing for some years absent from Breoklyn, anys that the tallness of American children is surprising. He sees thousands of them in London and their skyward increase is the more noticeable because they are in contrast with the average British bec, who is apt to be a runt. The height of our women and their capacious development and superior health are said to impress foreigners on their first arrival in America. These facts probally prove that America is a good country to live in, that, we have room to grow and are taking advantage of the opportunity. We are still, as a people, keeping to the old notion that it is well to have a bit of ground about the house; our health boards insist that the factory and school shall supply a certain number of feet of air to each occupant; we are multiplying play grounds we have not half enough of them yet; we are spending every year a longer time in the country and are buying or renting little be, es among the hills, or on the shore, and, in the matter of diet no people live so generously as the Americans.

We are the only people who have

Americans.

We are the only people who have meat on the table constantly. We have fruits of all kinds by the ton, our bread is made so cheap and good that the city housekeeper never thinks of making it any more, and has probably for atten how, and as to our vegetables, we have the greatest variety enjoyed by any nation. If you live in England you cannot have baked beans, or green corn, or pumpkin pie or dandelions, or spaghetti, or a whole lot of things that grow right here and are full of nutriment. And again, we have not, as a people, put our children are full of nutriment. And again, we shave not, as a people, put our children at trades in their early teens. We have kept them at school as long as our means enabled us to do so, add have encouraged them to play more or less in their free hours and to walk and swim.

But, especially, we have made their But, especially, we have made their position easy for the women who are their mothers. There are no other women who have so easy a time as ours, unless it may be the inmates of a Turkish harem, who are not supposed to do anything but grow fat and try to keep their looks. In other lands the woman works early and late, she toils in the fields like a common poverty by means that astonish the visitor from America and abe oftener erty by means that astonish the visitor from America and she oftener succumbs to an immoral life as the easier and more remunerative avoidance of it. The morality of our home life is another element in the health and growth that produces big, well appearing citizens of both sexes, and if it is true that the American is taking life less scriously than he used to and is trying to get more same enjoyment out of it and spending less time in work and fret, the business man stands a chance of taking on substance and being as tall as his daughter.—Brooklyn Engle.

Gessips and the Gessiping Habit.

Gossips and the Gossiping Habit. Gossipe and the Gossiping Habit.
Gossip is a bad habit that very few are entirely free from. Gossip is like swearing; every respectable person tries to quit it. People who are known as gossips are always cheap people, and they are never respected, for the religious that anyone who finds amuseinent in gossip, lacks intelligence, fairness and every other quality that makes men and women worthy of respect. A person who gossips does spect. A person who gossips does fairness and every other quality that makes men and women worthy of respect. A person who gossips does himself or herself more harm than the person gossiped about; people have learned, after long experience, that gossops usually exaggerate, and that a gossip is always unprincipled, and always idle and vicious. If it were fossible for gossips to ruin reputations there would be no such thing as a good reputation, for no one ever escaped being talked about. When a vicious person has a grudge against anyone, his first attempt is to injure him by "falking about" him. Every thief gossips about honest men, and honest men are not injured, because worthy people have learned to look upon gossip with distrust. People have learned that every gossip has some hidden history that is discreditable, and gossip is therefore damaging to the person who retails it.—Atchison Globe.

AS IT'S DONE IN AMERICA.

London to Adopt Our Way of Having Shoes Shined.

A very simple custom which is threatened with speedy extinction is shoeblacking in the streets of London. Hitherto, and even to-day, everyone who wants to have his boots blacked in London streets must perforce stand who wants to have his boots blacked in London streets must perforce stand up what time the red-jacketed urchin who, having got a customer through his shrill cries of "Shift yer boots, sir?" operates on the dusty or muddy footgear. But why should one stand when seats have been invented, and why, should one be jostled by passeraby, when such things as shope exist? When you come to think of it, there is more reason in having your boots blacked coram populo than in being shaved or having your trouvers button sewed on in the public streets. This extraordinary discovery has already been made abroad, and in France. Spain, Italy and other continental countries one walks into a little open room, seats one's self down en a comfortable cheir, and, while enjoying a cigarette and a peep at the morning or evening paper, one's boots or shoes are polished with perfect comfort to the wearer. Our cousins across the Atlantic have also discovered and for years enjoyed this luxurious and decent manner of having their boots blacked, and now we learn that they are going to be so good as to confer both upon us more old-fashienedfolk in England.

The American system of bootblacking is practically what we have de-

The American system of hootblacking is practically what we have described above; but, as it will soon be in active operation in London, to be followed doubtlessly by the more enterprising provincial towns, it may not be amiss to give a more detailed description of the American system. First of all, then, the boot cleaning is not done out of doors, but in an appropriately-fitted room, where one is not subject to the jostling of the passer-by nor the rude stare of the vulgar crowd—a thing which will be much appreciated by those of a retiring or nervous disposition. Secondly, you are scatted in a comfortable chair you are seated in a comfortable chair instead of being somewhat unsteadily balanced on one leg while the shoe on the other is being polished. On either side of the chair is an inclined either side of the chair is an inclined footrest upon which, of course, the feet are firmly planted during the operation of cleaning. We presume that smoking will not be prohibited, and, as newspapers will be provided free, reading can be indulged in "all the time," as our cousins would say. Thus the annoyance of having one's boots blacked in a busy street will be tupned into the enjoyment of five minutes' rest, "far from the madding crowd."

But this is not all. If what But this is not all. If what we hear proves true, the system of polishing will be altogether as new and as beneficial as the chair itself. Hitherto but little attention has been paid to the proper removal of old coating of blacking or of accumulated dirt on the boots. Now all is to be altered, the shoes will first be scraped of all such accumulations, then they will be sponged and dried before the new coat of blacking or polish be applied. When all is done a final artistic touch is given with a specially prepared When all is done a final artistic touch is given with a specially prepared cloth. Thus it will be seen that the new system—at least new to England—has much to commend it; indeed, its advantages are so obvious that the only wonder is why on earth it was never thought of before!—St. James Budget.

which the Populist governor would fill temporarily by appointment.

Ex-Senator W. V. Allen would undoubtedly secure this appointment if he wished it: otherwise Col. Bryan would be the man. The legislature next year would be called upon to elect two senators, as Thurston's term will have expired. Under the present political conditions in Nebraska the fusionists would probably control, and in conditions in Nebraska the Insion-ists would probably control, and in that case Bryan and Allen would probably be the senators, unless Bryan were elected president. Their relations are close.

Their relations are close.

Ex-Senator Allen is so devoted to Mr. Bryan's political fortunes that it would not be surprising to hear that he encouraged Bryan's appointment temporarily as senator, for the prestige it would give the latter, leaving the future to take care of his (Allen's) interests.

Was on an Englishman Who Had Applied for a Coat of Arma.

A genealogical joke, apropos to made-to-order pedigrees, is found in the Cornhill: A man applied to the college for a coat of arms, and was asked if any of his ancestors had been renowned for any singular achievement, but could recolled nothing. "Your father?" said the herald, aiding his memory. "Your grandfather?" "No," returns the applicant, "I never knew that I had a great-grandfather," a grandfather. "Of yourself?" asks this creator of dignity. "I know nothing of myself," returned the man "only that being once locked up in Ludgate prison for debt, I found means to escape from an upper window. I procured a cord, fixed it round the statne of King Lud, on the outside of the building, and thus let myself down."
"I have it," said the herald—"lineally descended from King Lud! and his coat of arms will do foryou."

How to Manage a Flock to Se cure Such Results.

Where poultry raising is car-ried on with the aim of profit the surest way to success is to have a flock that will yield every month This can be accom plished, but it will necessitate having chicks hatched out nice of the twelve months. December, January and Febuary are the months that may be the exceptions. If, however, incuba-tors and brooders are employed, and the farmer desires to make poultry raising a regular busi-ness as does the poultry expert the three months specified as ex-ceptions will really be the chief ones for hatching. To hatch and care for chicks during these three winter months will require brooder houses with the usual pipe system of heating and a suitable room to run the incubators in-a room that will not be affected too much by outside changes of temperature. It would hardly be advisable for farmers o commence poultry raising as ner and depend mainly on incu-bators an artificial brooders.
The venture should be first made with hens as sitters and having a number of small comfortable houses with hot-bed sash runs for the broods. Better still would be a long building, divided up into suitable runs and apart-ments for hens with broods. A house of this kind should be sit-uated on a southern slope, where there will be afforded, away were a husiness in an extensive manthere will be afforded every op-ortunity for sunshine and dry-ness. A stove should be provided, and the stove-pipe should run some distance inside to retain as much as possible all the heat that the draught usually carries out through this channel. If there is too much difficulty experienced in having hens broody as desired then it will be well to commence then it will be well to commence the trial of an incubator. A machine of 100-eggs capacity is better than a larger one to com-mence with. Home-made brooders can easily be made, which will work satisfactorily. There will work satisfactorily. There are, however, brooders that can are, however, brooders that can be purchased for $5 up that give excellent results. From the hatchings of each month there should be selected some of the thriftiest-growing pullets and they should, as soon as possibly, be separated from the others. Give them a place where they Give them a place where they need not be crowded and where they can be given good attention, Probably after about one year's experience—provided what is too often termed bad luck has sharpened the ideas, and proved that failures are due directly to mismanagementand nothing else—it will be the time to start on a more extensive scale. It will then be well enough to commence running the incubators by the 1st of October. When the sup-ply of eggs for incubators is needed, from November to needed, from November to March, the importance of having a healthy, vigorous flock will be appreciated. Where good sum-mer care has been given to a flock that has been properly selected they will be in good condition to go through the ordeal of the winter months in good shape. If a good, varied diet is provided and such flocks are comfortably housed and have good, roomy scratching sheds to secure re-quired exercise during inclement eather, the eggs from such a ock of hens should prove very proody and would lose valuable ime if allowed to sit, can readily the "broken up" and soon be time i allowed to sit, can leadly be "broken up" and soon be again producing eggs. In making poultry raising a regular business, locality and convenience of markets should convenience of markets should be duly considered. No matter how promising scrub poultry may be they cannot compete with pure-bred stock. The pure breeds possess utility qualities unsurpassed and proper selec-tion maintains it. It should be remembered that in every branch of the poultry business cleanli-ness, drynerss, a varied diet of pensed with. Success as well a failure in any occupation comes from easily traceable causes, and there is no luck or lottery about it. Effort is rewarded in accord-ance with intelligent application. ### THE REAL HIAWATHA It was early in the spring of 1881, just previous to the assassination of President Garfield, that the writer re-ceived the appointment of govern-ment teacher among the Chippewa ment teacher among the Chippewa Indians of the Lake Superior district. During a sojourn of several years among these historic people he had every opportunity of studying their habits and customs, of hearing them habits and customs, of hearing them tell in their own language the stories and legends of bygone days. Not the least interesting of these was the story of "Nanaboho," immortalized by the poet Longfellow under the name of "Hiawatha." There are some slight differences between the story told by the Chippewas and that published to the world by the poet, though the main points are the same. The legend is purely a Chippewa one, handed main points are the same. The eigend is purely a Chippewa one, handed down from father to son, and in the classic poem referred to every Indian name and every Indian allusion is strictly Chippewa, with the exception of the name of the hero and heroine, "Hiavatha" and "Minnehaha," which are Sioux Indian names, the two persons being known to the Chippewas as "Nanabozho" and "Waubahkeezis."

What Mr. Longfellow's idea was in thus depriving the Chippewas of their due honor can only be surmised. Probably he thought the names sounded more romantic or euphoni-According to the Chippewa version Hiawatha—or Nanabozho, as I shall henceforth call him—was born on the prairie of Manitoba. His mother died at his birth, and he was reared by his grandmother, old Nokomis. When he reached full manhoood his grandmother one day called him to her and told him that he had a bitter enemy, who had done his mother a great injury, and that it was his solemn duty to find that man and kill him. To aid him in the accomplish-ment of this act she presented him with a pair of minjekahwinun, or with a pair of migramagic mittens, and a pair of moc-assinum, or magic shoes. All that night Nanabozho pondered over the old squaw's story, and before the sun had arisen he was well on his way west. The magic shoes enabled him west. The magic shoes enabled him to cover a mile at every step, so that it was not long before he found himself at the foot of the Rocky mountains. Gazing up and down the rugged peaks he espied his enemy, Keewaypeaks he espied in senion, Aceway, Aceway, din, away to the northeast, perched upon one of the loftiest summits. With stately tread Nanabozho forced his way to the foot of the mountain height and in a great voice recited to Keewaydin the wrongs done his mother, ending with his own fixed determination to avenge those wrongs by killing him. Keewaydin responded in mocking tones and told Namabozho to "kill away." whereupon Nanabozho, with the aid of the magic mittens, saived a great rock and husbel if tone saived a great rock and husbel if tone saived. tens, seized a great rock and hurled it at Keewaydin, but he repelled it with one puff of breath, and it fell crumbling into dust at his feet. Then Kee-waydin, angered at Nanabozho's act, waydin, angered at Nanabozho's set, tore up a tree by its roots and east it at Nanabozho with terrific force, but the latter warded off the blow with his mittened hands, and the tree turned to tinderwood at his touch.

When the two braves thus found that neither could hurt the other, they formed a contract of peace and Nanabozho returned to his grand-mother's wigwam. Long and anxiously the old woman watched for his return and when he announced to her the failure of his mission she became exceeding angry. Chiding him for his want of courage to prolong the struggle with Keewaydin, Nokomis told him that for seven days and nights he must remain upon the banks of the Tahquahmenon river, abstaining from food and drink during that

"An old-tashloned gentleman"—that's was the last of the failure to carry out her wishes. Long and wat they said—with the dead the seemed to the many. Among them he last was seen by the way he carried his lives seen by the way he carried his lives seen by the way he carried his lives seen by the way he carried his mother, but he bravely stood the orders of his grand-mother, but he bravely stood the orders of his grand-mother, but he bravely stood the orders.

A relief to the monotony of the oc casion came at last. It was on the fifth evening of his enforced fast, a the sun was nearing the western hori attracted by the approach of a stranger coming toward him from the east. He was a man of magnificen figure, tall and squarely built, evi dently one of a tribe of giants. His feathers, blanket and mocassins were all in yellow, presenting a startling appearance, to say the least. On nearing Nanahozho he spoke to him and said his name was Mundahmin, or "The Yellow Man," and that he had wandered afar from the wigwams of wandered afar from the wigwams of his people. He then invited Nan-bozho to wrestle with him, but the young Chippewa demurred, rightly thinking that he would be like a child in the hands of the giant. However, after considerable persuasion, Nana-bozho reluctantly consented to wres-tle. A few brief struggles and Nana-bozho found himself prostrate upon the ground. On arising to his feet hediscovered that the Yellow Man had he discovered that the Yellow Man had mysteriously vanished. Not a of him anywhere, not even a footy by which he might be trailed. All that night and the next day

All that night and the next day Nanaboxho pondered over the strange visit, and wondered what it could por-tend. That evening, at about the same hour, Nanaboxho was awe-struck to see the form of Mundahmin again appearing from the east. After the customary greeting the Yellow Man again invited Nanabozho to wrestle, but, remembering his experiwreste, but, rememering in experience of the previous evening, he declined. However, the persuasive tones of Mundahmin overcame his scruples, and soon he found himself again sprawling upon the ground, and his visitor vanished, as into thin air.

Here was a condition of affairs cer-tainly mystifying, if not startling Who was this stranger and what could his repeated visits mean? At ast a bright idea entered Nanabozho's mind—the magic mittens!

"If the yellow man comes back today and wants me to wrestle with him
I will be prepared," soliloquized Nanabozho.

Sure enough at the same hour the maxt day Mundahmin returned. He was not a little surprised at the alacrity with which Namabozho accepted thy with which NaBadozno accepted his invitation to wrestle. Long and arduous was the struggle for the mas-tery, the sinewy bodies swayed to and fro. First one and then the other seemed to be gaining the ascendancy, when suddenly Nanabozho felt himwhen suddenly Nanabozho felt him-self possessed of supernatural strength, for without apparantly any effort he lifted Mundahmin above his head and threw him to the ground, where he lay perfectly motionless. Then terror seized the heart of Nanabozho. Was Mundahmin dead, had he killed him? Kneeling beside the prostrate form he best his ear to nad he killed him? Kneeling beside the prostrate form he bent his ear to the heart. Not a sound the heart. Not a sound, not a move-ment! What a predicament. Here was one evidently of a tribe of giants whom Nanabozho had killed! So soon as he was missed by his people they would come in search of him and make war upon the Chippewas to avenge his death. Glancing anxious-ly around to see that there were no witnesses to the tragedy, Nanabozho threw the lifeless form over his shoul-der, and wonded his way laboriously der and wended his way laboriously into the depths of the forest. After traversing several miles and assuring himself that he was not followed, h nimseir that he was not followed, he placed his burden upon the ground, and upon hands and knees he dug out a long, narrow grave. In this he de-posited the body, covering it with the loose earth and again with dead leaves loose earth and again with dead leaves and branches, thus obliterating all traces of the silent dead. He next marked a nearby tree for future iden-tification. Then he traveled wearly toward his grandmother's wigwan, his days of penance now being ended

him. But they came not.
Early the next morning, unobserved, he sought the forest grave to see if it had been disturbed. No, all was as he had left it. His mind grew easier, and for several days he kept away from his buried secret. At the end of a week he again visited the grave and was surprised to find growing up from the center of it a stout green blade, about a foot in height. He watched the plant carefully, tended it every day until it had grown to

A WONDERFUL INSTRUMENT.

Pianoforte That Climatic Changes Can-not Affect.

The oddest of all pianos manufac-tured up to date will shortly start from San Francisco for a long tour of the world. With it will go its invent-or and manufacturer, Moritz Rosen-thal, the famous pianist, whose inge-nuity has produced something really uity has produced something really under the sun.

This piano is anti-climatic—that is o say it is proof against all atmos-pheric changes that heretofore have assailed perambulating pianos. Testdecarefully and thoroughly with all legrees of heat and cold, dryness and noisture, it has demonstrated that none of these conditions can affect its ne quality.

The inventor has "treated" it after prescriptions known only to himself.
The piano, which is smaller than a small grand, has had all kinds of experiments tried upon it, until now it perfected-neither the tropics nor arctic can disturb its musical se renity. The length of the instrument is five feet, its width three feet. Beautifully polished rosewood will encase its mechanism and its sounding oard was brought from Germany

All of the 7,000 pieces used in its construction were handled by the mu-cian himself during the many nonths that the piano has been build-

From San Francisco it will go to Australia, and then will tour through England, Germany, France, Italy. It will travel by train and ox-team and oossibly camel -back-for its owner possibly camel -back—for its owner proposes taking it to Africa and all kinds of out-of-the-way places. A 'traveling overcoat of metal, lined with a layer of felt and one of cham-ois, flat on the bottom, rounded on the top and hermetically scaled, is provided for this medicated music-

Just how precious such an instrument as this will be to Moritz Rosen thal can be best understood by music lovers. The average piano is a tender instrument, but here is one that can stand any treatment.—N. Y. Journal.
